Michael Hennigan's analysis is always very informing. I referred to his analysis when I started my Reports on the Irish Government (Faillte 32) some years back. First, we have to take the Irish Government out of the equation. They have ruined the development of indigenous industry in Ireland. Second, we have to insist that multinationals that get tax breaks (that would be every multinational company in Ireland) assist with the development of indigenous industry. They have portfolios of IP and start up Irish companies can be built up around these. That's what my group, Iverna Group, proposed by bringing an amazing U.S. parent company to Ireland that was going to bring a portfolio of biotech companies and IP to Ireland and develop a biotech hub in Ireland. These companies had already benefited from considerable investment. But we were screwed over by you know who. It's not rocket science, but rather political science, unfortunately.
