

ALL COMMENTS 4

Newest

FromNY · JUST NOW

Although I don't disagree with anything already said, I force myself to have a more positive outcome even though I was rightly screwed over by you know who when trying to bring FDI to Ireland (Opportunity Ireland). I recently heard that my alma matter, the University of Limerick, got a 5 star rating in global ranking (was this mentioned in Irish Times?). We just got to keep moving forward like UL. Ed Walsh was the pioneer behind UL back in the early 70's and arguably created a new norm in third level education in Ireland. If he could do it back then, we can do it again today. I had a letter to the editor published in the Wall Street Journal recently regarding UL and Ed Walsh and how they were ahead of the game. Us Irish we all have to believe are great at being ahead of the game, we've a great reputation abroad, so lets build on it. I've recently reached out to many in Ireland inc. IBEC, EI, IDA, Limerick City and County Council etc. requesting a list of indigenous Irish companies that might be interested in partnerships with U.S. companies, so that we can attract more FDI (see Opportunity Ireland section of my U.S. website, Falite 32). I'm still awaiting their response as I'm sure they would be only too happy to assist Irish companies any way they can.

REPLY 0

Seantoir · 49 MIN AGO

A good start would be to be done with the usual political suspects. Together or apart Fianna Fáil, Fine Gael and Labour suffer an absolute dearth of vision of what Ireland can be other than a quaint island province of a European superstate, and the Greens want to live in a magic land where new bus services can get from A to B without addressing overwhelming traffic congestion in parallel (see Galway).

As an old Stater it grieves me to say it but come the next election I will be voting for

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Ads By ZEDO

Dell Technologies

Improve remote worker experiences and productivity.

Test Your Readiness

IT | FINANCIAL SERVICES

KBC

SUGGESTED

KBC to recover unit bailout w

intel

Dell Technologies solutions with Intel